

Consider Dr. Deborah Davis' text The Adult Learner's Companion...

Unlike the traditional student, adult learners face a different set of challenges when achieving success in their studies. Often they are employed either full or part time, have a family, and must juggle numerous responsibilities and obligations with limited time and financial resources. Consequently, adult learners need to know where and how to get help and who to ask for help—quickly and easily. Dr. Deborah Davis offers a new text, the Adult Learner's Companion, to address the specific needs of our adult students. The author, a former adult student herself, presents the material in an accessible, student-friendly style that is both encouraging and motivating. The result is a concise manual that helps adult learners navigate their way through the college experience, while providing the skills for academic achievement. The Adult Learner's Companion takes into account knowledge gained through life experience, and suggests how work-related experience can be applied in the classroom.
